HOW ARE CLASSES OFFERED?

Students take two courses each semester (fall, spring, and summer) and attend one full weekend of in-person class each month. Students also participate in synchronous and asynchronous online activities to support learning.

PROGRAM-DEFINING FEATURES

Students take courses as a cohort and typically form a close supportive group. Cohort members learn from each others experience as they apply course content to their work and field settings. Regular advisor support is provided in-person, virtually, and via email and phone as needed. New students are provided with a multi-year calendar so they can plan for full attendance. Students provide input around cohort course selection.

FIELD EDUCATION

Field placement begins in the first semester and continues for the duration of the degree program. Students devote 8-10 hours per week during the first year and 10-12 hours weekly in the second and third years. Most placements are workplace-based in a different department from the student's customary employment responsibilities and supervised by an MSW. Students may complete their placement in a single setting, provided it offers progressively challenging opportunities for growth.
