

Remote Response to Student Disclosures of Interpersonal Violence

The transition to online learning during the COVID-19 crisis will continue to present challenges, including supporting students remotely during a time of heightened risk of domestic violence and familial abuse¹, substance abuse and mental health emergencies². Students who are already more vulnerable to economic instability, health insecurity and systemic racism face additional risk. Below are some best practice tips for supporting students who may disclose interpersonal violence during the crisis:

Assess for Immediate Danger: If a student discloses interpersonal violence (intimate partner violence, sexual assault, stalking, sexual harassment and/or stalking online or in-person) online and they are in immediate danger and/or require medical attention, encourage them to call 911 immediately.

Explain limits of confidentiality: Let the student know that you can protect their privacy, but you cannot promise confidentiality. Tell the student that as a responsible employee of the University, you are required to report the incident to the college's Title IX Office or Office of Employment Equity, but you will not tell anyone else. Consider including this sample syllabus statement on Canvas or your online course platform to alert students prior to disclosures, or send an e-mail with the statement and the attached resource page. More information can be found at endsexualviolence.rutgers.edu.

Listen and Validate: Let the student know that the violence is not their fault. Validate the emotions that they may be experiencing (shame, fear, anger) and that it is not easy to make such disclosures. Remember there is no 'right' way to respond to trauma.

Provide Resources and Choice: Remind students that although you are required to report the incident to the Title IX Office, they have the right to file a complaint or not to file a complaint with the college online or via phone. Provide them with the resources listed below.

Reach Out for Support: Remember that you do not have to address these issues alone. Do not hesitate to reach out to Rutgers Violence Prevention and Victim Assistance (VPVA) or Title IX Offices for consultation (contact information below).
